Please note that it is best practice to have the installer of the window approve the size and specifications you are purchasing. Even if a salesperson works with you in store or virtually, Meade's cannot be responsible for any measures or builds unless we have been on jobsite, and you have purchased a measure from Meade's. We will build to the measurements given during an order.

Replacement or New Construction Descriptions:

There is no cost difference between these when buying from Meade's. However, they are used for different purposes and are constructed and installed differently.

Replacement Windows:

Replacement windows (also referred to as retrofit windows) have been developed so a contractor does not have to remove the exterior materials of the home in order to install the window; they are measured to fit in an existing window opening and will only replace the actual sashes of the window.

New construction Windows:

New construction windows are used when a brand new home or a new addition to a home is being built. Since the studs of the home are exposed the window can be installed directly onto the frame by use of a nail fin frame, which means it is nailed into the framing of the home.

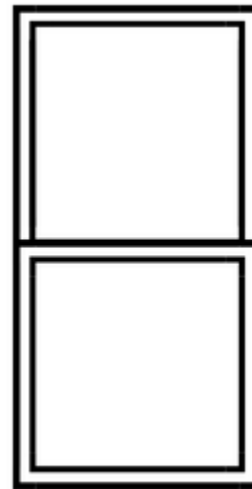

Single Hung, Double Hung, Fixed or Slider Descriptions:

Single Hung Window:

A single-hung window, also known as a single-sash window, is a type of window with a lower, operable sash and an upper, fixed sash. This means that the bottom part of the window slides up and down, while the top part remains stationary.

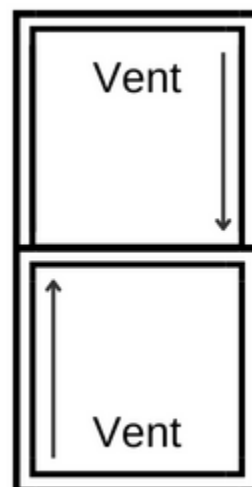

Single Hung

Double Hung Window:

A double-hung window, also commonly referred to as a double-sash window, is a type of window that has two operable sashes that slide up and down. There are two main operable parts of a double-hung window — the top sash and the bottom sash. They are both able to open to provide ventilation.

Double Hung

Fixed Window:

A fixed window is set in the closed position. It is stationary and cannot open (non-operational).

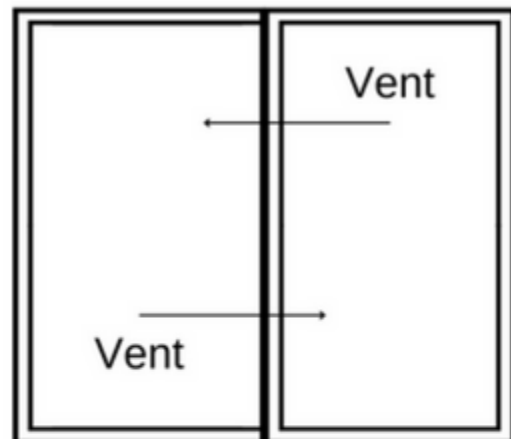

Fixed

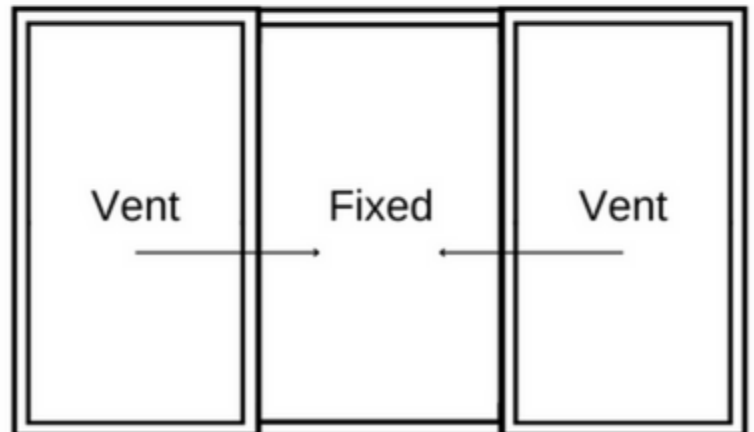

Slider Window:

A sliding window is a window that opens by sliding horizontally along a top and bottom track in the window frame. It can be single hung or double hung, which will dictate how many of the sashes move side to side. Sliding glass windows are often found in rooms where an unobstructed view of the outdoors is desired or where maximum ventilation is needed. Since they are easy to open from left and right, sliding windows are commonly found in spaces that are difficult to reach, such as above the kitchen sink or behind a soaking tub. They are also ideal for openings in which the width is greater than the height.
